VOLUME 29 : NUMBER 12 JANUARY 2020

2019: The Year in Review

This was a year filled with accomplishments and anniversaries. After a long and slow awakening to alarms about our declining and aging population and our retail apocalypse, steps were taken to address those issues.

The Planning and Zoning Commission spent over a year working on and completing a new town plan, with an emphasis on economic development, housing, and community development, toward a goal of encouraging business and promoting an influx of younger families.

On July 26, an astonishing crowd packed the CCS gym, brushed off any discussion, and overwhelmingly passed a resolution to continue work on a community sewer system in West Cornwall. Most saw this as a vital step toward reestablishing West Cornwall as our center of commerce and tourism. And by year end, the Covered Bridge Electric Bike Rental was doing well; the Union opened as an event and meeting space; and local investors purchased the Pink House with the goal of opening an eatery on that property.

Other achievements included the renovation of the West Cornwall firehouse to accommodate the needs of a larger EMS team and the completion of the restoration of the North Cornwall Meeting House. A monument to the town's Civil War veterans—conceived by Spencer Markow—was dedicated on Veterans Day.

The Little Guild provided the most entertaining event of the year with its Great Country Mutt Show. Hundreds crowded the town green for a show filled with amusing competitions and polite butt sniffing. Cornwall loves dogs.

Although interest in local politics continued in a decades-long coma, somehow we muster enough dedicated volunteers to run the town and run it pretty well. Only 39 percent of voters—an all-time low—turned out in the November municipal election, which was mostly uncontested and elected Gordon Ridgway to his 15th term as first selectman.

There were two notable real estate sales in town. The Cornwall Castle sold for $1,600,000 and is currently being restored. A five-bedroom home on Reed Brook Road, built in 2007, sold for $2,725,000.

Animal stories are an essential feature of the Chronicle. Roxann Roche reported on her loyal but peevish donkey in January. Jeff Jacobson wrote movingly about the aging of his black lab in February. In April, Carol Schneider reported that mountain lions are back; just ask John Miller. Nora Horan wrote about her two porcupines in May, and Roxana Robinson warned us about snapping turtles in September.

There were three important anniversaries in town. This was the 30th anniversary of the tornado of 1989. The historical society recognized it with an exhibit, and the Chronicle published a fascinating first-hand report on the storm by Cilla Mauro in our June issue.

In August, the Rose Algrant Art Show marked its 60th anniversary. The show began in 1959 with nine artists, including Marc Simon and Ruth Gannett. This year more than 50 artists displayed their work.

The Cornwall Library celebrated 150 years with many events, including a party in May, an exhibit of sculptures by Tim Prentice, and a delightful Thanksgiving reading of works by James Thurber, Lewis Gannett, Carl Van Doren, and Laurie Colwin.

This was also the 50th anniversary of a remarkable year, 1969, which gave us the first moon landing, Woodstock, the Manson murders, Vietnam, and Chappaquiddick. In October, the Mets won the World Series in one of the greatest upsets in baseball history, and I closed on a house in Cornwall Village and moved to town with my wife, Audrey, and our four-year-old daughter Emily.

Weather or Not?

The readings went up all day on July 21, from the time the sun rose at 5:37 a.m. They reached their peak a few minutes before 6 p.m. when the thermometer hit 96.1°F. This was the warmest moment of the year recorded by weather station KCTEASTC2 on Mohawk Mountain, exactly six months after January 21, when it had tracked the lowest air temperature of 2019 at -9.4°F.

Meteorological data like this (plus humidity, precipitation, and wind speed) is collected constantly and can be found online at <http://api.wunderground.com/personal-weather-station/dashboard?ID=KCTEASTC2>. What the information does not provide is a change in attitude towards Cornwall by number crunchers, such as the website bestplaces.net. They run a so-called "comfort index" and malign Cornwall "as one of the least comfortable places in Connecticut," which must be news to our "summer people" who do appreciate temperatures such as 74.7°F (average in July 2019) or 69.5°F (average in August 2019).

Those numbers are rising, mind you. 2019 saw one of the hottest Julys on record in much of New England, which affirmed a report of the Climate System Research Center at the University of Massachusetts Amherst from 2016. It had said that "the annual mean temperature in Connecticut has already increased by about 3°F since 1895—faster than the rise in global mean temperature," with a significant uptick since 1993, exceeding "the 20th-century average every year."

This will probably not slow down. The UMass scientists project that New England will warm much more rapidly than the globe as a whole and any other United States region.

Even the Farmers' Almanac, whose predictions are only correct about half of the time, seems to agree. This is its take on 2020 for the region: "Winter will be milder than normal, on average, with above-normal precipitation and near-or-below-normal snowfall...April and May will have above-normal temperatures. Summer temperatures will be hotter than normal, with the hottest periods in mid-June, mid- to-late-July, and early August."

Real results will be provided later. Duti-fully reported by KCTEASTC2.

Last Bow at P&Z

Those of us who were at the final public hearing on Cornwall's town plan last November were also at the final meeting led by longtime P&Z chair David Colbert. Retiring from P&Z service after 19 years, seven as board chair, Colbert recently reflected on his long tenure.

"I remember when I was first elected chair being asked what my platform was," he recalled. "I said, 'get people excited about serving on P&Z and include members of the public who attend the meetings.'" He said that it can be hard to control meetings when you do that, but it helps the process, "Everyone who comes feels strongly, wants to be heard, and they don't have to win the day," he added.

The first of Colbert's accomplishments took place around the year 2000. With a strong economy, P&Z was looking for ways to control development while preserving the rural character of our town. Colbert hit upon ridgeline protection as a way to limit the steepness of the slope upon which new homes could be built. No other towns had done this; there was no similar regulation in place in our region. With little sense of what was needed to make his idea come to life, a regulation was drafted, passed into law with no controversy, and remains on the books to this day.

Colbert encountered a different reality several years later when trying to balance development against preserving Cornwall's open space. This time it took several years, over 15 meetings, and the invaluable help of our town planner Tom McGowan to write, revise, and rewrite regulations that would require developers of subdivisions to contribute to public spaces. Once passed, these regulations were rarely enforced. Two more years of revisions were necessary before the measure finally passed in a form that the commission felt comfortable enforcing.

Colbert was quick to emphasize the different roles played by Planning & Zoning and the Zoning Board of Appeals. Despite some beginner's luck, he points out, "Regs are notoriously difficult to write and get passed." As for enforcement, "If someone is not happy and seeks recourse, the Zoning Board of Appeals serves as second opinion."

And over Colbert's tenure plenty of people have sought second opinions. One that came to Colbert's mind was the issue of establishing a place in town for composting Sweet Peat. "From a P&Z perspective it was easy, we said go ahead, there was nothing in the regs that disallowed what they were doing," Colbert said. Landowners appealed and lost, ultimately costing the town money and creating unhappy neighbors.

Another controversy that continues simmering to this day concerns short-term house rentals, such as Airbnb. P&Z has been asked several times over the years to regulate the practice, but the commission has consistently determined that no regs exist and has refused to create such regs. P&Z looked to the state and neighboring towns for precedent and, finding none, decided to formally and indefinitely table the issue.

Remaining modest to a fault, Colbert refuses to highlight his legacy or accomplish-

Q&A with the King of the Castle

I recently caught up with Russell Barton, new owner of the legendary Hidden Valley Estate (aka "The Castle") at 61 Castle Road in West Cornwall.

Q: How long have you been in the real estate business?

A: 40 years.

Q: What attracted you to the Castle?

A: I like unusual properties.

Q: What's the most unusual aspect of living in a 16-room, 8,412-square-foot home with 10 baths?

A: The façade is actually the most unusual. The inside is what you make it and we've made it our home.

Q: Any surprises renovating a grand cha-teau built between 1921–1924?

A: There was some mold, but that's expected after being abandoned for years.

Q: How does Cornwall compare with the other places you have lived?

A: It's my second time owning in Cornwall. I love the country feel, beautiful mountains, and the people are wonderful. They are always friendly and helpful.

Q: Your driveway is said to be a mile long. Who plows it?

A: I do. It's the easiest driveway I've ever plowed. You just go straight!

Q: Come spring, who will mow the grass?

A: I will.

Q: You own well over 200 acres. How much of the property have you actually seen?

A: I already know every blade of grass!

Q: Do you treat your wife any differently now that she is a queen?

A: She's always been my queen.

Previously sold in 2001 for $5,925,000, 61 Castle Road was bought by Russell Barton and Susi Stone last summer for $1,600,000, placing it fourth on the grand list of property in Cornwall.

Pastels and Epistles

The first words were written by David Grossman and published on July 1, 2007: "I would appreciate seeing the advocates of repealing the approval of the CCS addition explain their position on this discussion page... We need debate on this important matter before we vote." The post made light of a new local public forum with room to talk about important issues. The most intense at the time was the addition to the school, a controversial pocketbook affair.

Over time, the Cornwall Community Network evolved. It drew more than 400 members, most of them participating passively as "lurkers." Those who contributed created a treasure trove of over 35,000 messages. This last November they were in danger of being erased, when the host company announced out of the blue it would kick CCN and all other groups to the curb. Fortunately, the Cornwall Association's website committee got involved and transferred everything to a safe harbor with a new address: CornwallCommunityNetwork@groups.io.

And so, all members can still dive into this huge and unfiltered collection of epistles, quips, and repartees. It is an archive full of sightings, not just of animals, but of exotic characters, as well. Remember "Miike Donner," the only person ever expelled from the group? Or a woman from France who wrote in to applaud "madam Lazlo's photos and Pastels de Madame Sybil Perry" and show serious interest in actor Sam Waterston ("I know he lives in Cornwall"). She later came to visit and was greeted by French-speaking local chevaliers like Hendon Chubb. He, by the way, had written message #2, in which he asked participants to adhere to a "plea for civility." Which is not too difficult to follow, if you start with what network administrator Casey Cook request-

E-BIKING CORNWALL'S HILLS

Do you remember when you learned how to ride a bike? Someone was running along giving you a push? That's what the new electric bikes feel like all the time. I was visiting my mother and I rented one for the day and happily biked along the shores of the Housatonic River Road and then easily climbed over Music Mountain Road and Cream Hill Road! Later I pedaled by the dramatic waterfall on the Housatonic River Road north of Falls Village and wove through pastures and farms. Bob Ensign has fixed up the old cafe building with knotty pine walls, a propane fire-place, a choice of bikes, helmets, and even gloves and coffee and energy bars (in case you come back hungry and cold). The hills of Connecticut used to seem daunting to me but with an E bike they are no big deal!

conducts its business. I would like to suggest an easy, no cost initial step...create a single email address so that citizens can be assured that when they write to the Board of Selectmen their message will reach ALL their elected selectmen.

At the present time, correspondence addressed to cwselectmen@optonline.net only goes to the first selectman and he decides what correspondence will be shared with the other selectmen. I believe that this email address is misleading and that most citizens using it assume that their emails are reaching ALL their selectmen.

The previous Board of Selectmen rejected a request to make this address deliverable to all or create a new one that would end this misleading situation. I hope that this newly constituted board will act to make direct and open communication not only possible but more likely by remedying this problem. At the present time, if you want to be sure your messages or questions reach all BOS members you must also send your emails to Marina Kotchoubey (mkotchoubey@gmail.com) and Priscilla Pavel (priscilla@bainrealestate.com)
